Still using her powers, Carrie flips the car into a gas station, setting it on fire, and killing them. Carrie then goes home, seeking comfort from her mother, but is instead attacked by her. This is, without a doubt, the scariest scene in the film and Julianne Moore, who plays Margaret, is terrifyingly brilliant.

Carrie, released in 1976, has one of the first modern jump scares. The scene in which Carrie's bloodied arm abruptly emerges from the soil at the end of the film, is credited as the inspiration for the use of a final jump scare in the 1980 film Friday the 13th, to show that an apparently dead villain had survived.
