When Activision announced Call of Duty: Warzone Mobile in 2024, the developer said it was planning to release the game; some time this year, shortly after Call of Duty: Modern Warfare II became available. Now, Activision has published a trailer for; the mobile title, with the revelation that it's coming out sometime in the spring of 2024 instead. It has no; specific launch date yet, but those interested can already pre-order from Google Play or the App Store.

Warzone Mobile is a; battle royale experience, which will put up to 120 players on a single map. The matches; operators, weapons, locations and; combat are supposed to be familiar to current Warzone fans. It will also share a Battle Pass, as well as; feature cross-progression, with Modern Warfare II and Warzone 2.0. While the game won't be widely available until 2024, fans in; Australia, Chile, Norway and Sweden have been able to play it since earlier this year. This "limited release" version gives; Activision a way to test the game with a wider audience than it can with its Closed Alpha, so it; can find and fix more bugs, stress test matches and collect as much feedback as possible on gameplay and different; elements of the title.
