The roll-over 35x is a term frequently encountered in financial products, especially in the case of credit cards. It refers to the daily interest rate applied to the credit card's life cycle. The APR is calculated based on the annual interest rate (APR) of the credit card. To calculate the daily interest rate, the APR is divided by the number of days in the year. Therefore, 35x means that the daily interest rate will be applied 35 times throughout the period. For example, if the APR of the credit card is 15%, the daily interest rate will be 0.041096% (15% divided by 365). If a person has a credit card with a R$1,000 limit and a daily interest rate of 0.041096%, they will have to pay R$0.41 (0.041096% of R$1,000) if the interest rate is applied 35 times throughout the period, the total interest rate will be 14.37% per year. In summary, a 35x roll-over is a daily interest rate applied 35 times throughout the period to a credit card, 15% of
