According to the acclaimed author, There are three levels of horror:

1. The Gross-Out.

2. Horror.

3. Scared (being horrified) at an awful realization of the depth of the unpleasant.

Horror, while terror is more related to being anxious about the possibility of a sudden, violent death.

Scared is a more complex emotion, often involving a realization of the danger or the magnitude of the situation.

Horror is often associated with the unknown, the grotesque, and the macabre. It is a primal fear that taps into our deepest instincts. Horror is a genre that has evolved over time, from the folklore of the past to the modern horror novel and film. It is a genre that has the power to terrify and fascinate. Horror is a genre that has the power to make us feel like we are in a terrifying situation. Horror is a genre
